FinTech refers to new technologies and innovations that aim to disrupt and compete with traditional approaches to the delivery of financial products and services. The emergence of sophisticated cryptography technology has enabled significant digital innovation in FinTech, including the development of blockchain technology. Blockchain, in turn, has led to the emergence of a new class of digital assets known as crypto assets or cryptocurrencies, the most well-known of which is Bitcoin. AI has revolutionized FinTech, introducing a wide range of new tools that are transforming the business of finance across departments and functions. In combination with sophisticated Machine-Learning, organisations are discovering how to mine and analyse their data while streamlining business processes and operations...
